

The 30-Minute Content Sprint

A month of social content. One session with Claude.

"You don't have a content problem. You have a starting problem."

THE PROBLEM

You know you should post. You just can't start.

Consistency is the whole game on social media. Every expert says it. Every algorithm rewards it. And yet most small business owners and creators post in bursts, go quiet for two weeks, post again, and feel guilty about the gap.

The problem isn't motivation. The problem is sitting down to a blank page with no system. You write one post, feel like it used up everything you had, and stop. Or you spend 45 minutes on a caption that gets twelve likes and wonder why you bother.

The 30-minute content sprint changes this. One focused session with Claude at the start of the month gives you 12 post ideas fully mapped out — angle, opening line, and format. You're not writing from scratch anymore. You're executing a plan.

This isn't about making Claude write your posts for you. It's about using Claude to do the planning work you've been skipping — so you can show up every week with something real to say.

THE PROMPT

Your Template

Copy this prompt. Fill in the three bracketed fields. Run it once at the start of the month. You'll have your whole content calendar mapped before the first week begins.

PROMPT

I run [type of business/account] and I want to post consistently about [your topic or niche].

My audience is [describe who follows you – even roughly].

Give me 12 post ideas for the next month – 3 per week.

For each idea, give me:

- The angle (the hook or point of view)
- One sentence that could open the post
- The format (story, tip, question, behind-the-scenes, etc.)

Keep it practical and specific to my type of business.

SEE IT IN ACTION

A solo wedding photographer runs the sprint.

Filled in: 'I run a solo wedding photography business. My audience is engaged couples planning their first wedding. I post about behind-the-scenes reality, shot tips, and real client moments.' Part of what Claude returned:

CLAUDE'S RESPONSE

Week 1, Idea 1 — The Shot List Reality

Angle: Most couples don't know what a shot list actually does (and doesn't do).

Opening: 'Your shot list is a starting point, not a guarantee.'

Format: Educational tip with a real example from a recent wedding.

Week 1, Idea 2 — Golden Hour Isn't Magic

Angle: Demystify the golden hour obsession. It's great, but it's not everything.

Opening: 'Every photographer says golden hour. Here's what I do when it's overcast.'

Format: Behind-the-scenes with photos from two lighting conditions.

Week 2, Idea 1 — The Editing Room

Angle: Show what 'editing' really means — hours, choices, why it costs what it costs.

Opening: 'This one photo took 40 minutes. Here's why.'

Format: Before/after reveal with a short process explanation.

YOUR TURN

Run your sprint this week.

Open Claude. Fill in your business type, your topic, and a rough description of your audience — even two sentences is enough. Run the prompt. You'll have 12 ideas in under two minutes. Then:

- Pick 4 ideas from the list to post this week — one every other day.
- Save the rest as your content bank for the rest of the month.
- When you write each post, come back to Claude with the angle and opening line. Ask it to help you expand into a full caption.
- Repeat at the start of next month. The sprint takes 30 minutes. The consistency compounds.

More free kits at ejoshi.ai/resources — one new prompt every week.

More kits every week at ejoshi.ai/resources — free, forever.